30-Day Sovereignty Reset is part of the Distinct Character protocol ecosystem. It is designed for educational, developmental, behavioral governance, and self-mastery implementation use.

This protocol does not provide medical advice, psychiatric advice, psychotherapy, legal advice, financial advice, diagnosis, or crisis treatment. If you are experiencing acute distress, risk of harm, medical symptoms, or a clinical emergency, seek support from a licensed professional or emergency service in your location.

A Letter from Azari Solenne

Welcome.

Before beginning the 30-Day Sovereignty Reset, I want to clarify the purpose of this timed protocol.

A reset is not a punishment for inconsistency. It is not an emergency rebrand. It is not a demand that you become perfectly regulated, endlessly available, or impossibly disciplined within thirty days.

This protocol exists because sovereignty has to be practiced under real conditions.

Not only when life is quiet. Not only when the body feels resourced. Not only when relationships are easy, calendars are clean, and motivation is available.

The reset gives you a defined container for returning to authority, stabilizing daily behavior, reducing energetic leakage, and rebuilding trust with your own execution.

You will work with biological securing, relational auditing, intuitive authority, identity anchoring, and daily implementation. These are not isolated exercises. They are governance repetitions.

The purpose is not to perform control. The purpose is to recover command.

Some days will require the full protocol. Some days will require a low-capacity adaptation. Both count when they are chosen with honesty and structural awareness.

Use this reset as a laboratory. Notice where you leak authority. Notice what creates urgency. Notice where you negotiate against your own limits. Notice what becomes possible when the system is simple enough to repeat.

Do not use this work to override your body. Do not treat sovereignty as isolation, aggression, or emotional numbness. Sovereignty is not the absence of need. It is the capacity to remain in right relationship with yourself while making clean decisions.

Proceed with steadiness.

The reset is not asking you to become someone else in thirty days. It is asking you to stop abandoning the person you are responsible for governing.

SECTION I

The Operating System: The Pre-Requisite

The Mandate of Execution

Intellectual comprehension is not biological integration. Reading about your nervous system does not regulate it. Knowing the theory of boundaries does not make them real. Understanding the architecture of identity does not install it.

Your body and mind are not separate systems. They are a single, interconnected network operating on the same substrate. When you are chronically held in a state of high alert, when your sympathetic nervous system is stuck in fight, flight, or freeze, you are biologically wired for reactivity. In that state, soft power is not merely difficult to access. It is physiologically unavailable.

A systematic and intentional reset is not a luxury or a self-care indulgence. It is a biological necessity. The body must be brought online before the mind can lead.

The Capstone Prerequisite

This is the capstone of the Tier 1 Architecture. You have completed the Somatic Baseline (Phase 1), the Cognitive Architecture (Phase 2), the Execution Engine (Phase 3), and Relational Command (Phase 4). You are no longer mapping. You are enforcing. This 30-day protocol is the testing ground for your installed system. Bring what you have built. Apply it here.

The Architecture of the Reset

This 30-Day Protocol is your implementation engine. It is your intentional pause to systematically slow down, recalibrate, and return to your governed self. You are not here to consume more theory. You are here to install these tools as your default operating system, so that sovereignty becomes your baseline, not your aspiration.

Consistency over intensity. Small, deliberate actions repeated across thirty days create shifts that no single breakthrough moment can produce. The protocol does not require you to feel ready. It requires you to begin.

How This Protocol Is Structured

- Week 1: Biological Securing. Shift your physiological baseline. Install the nervous system reset as your biological default.
- Week 2: Relational Auditing. Stop the external bleeding of your energy. Execute real-time boundaries in lived context.
- Week 3: Somatic Decoupling. Learn to read your internal data center without the interference of fear or conditioned response.
- Week 4: Ecosystem Governance. Transition isolated daily habits into a permanent leadership posture and governed identity.

The Hard vs. Soft Power Baseline Audit

You cannot dismantle a system you refuse to examine. Complete this audit before Day 1 begins. Review your most recent high-stress interactions. For each dimension below, mark where you currently default. The objective is ruthless awareness, not judgment.

Dimension 1: Control vs. Influence

Do you default to commanding, directing, and telling others what to do? Or do you influence and inspire by asking for input, sharing a vision, and creating conditions for others to lead themselves?

My Current Default Pattern:

Dimension 2: Force vs. Flow

Are you pushing, pressuring, and trying to make something happen before it is ready? Or are you yielding, trusting the process, and working with the timing of things rather than against it?

My Current Default Pattern:

Dimension 3: Reaction vs. Response

Do you react with anger, defensiveness, or shutdown? Or do you respond with calm, presence, and the deliberate pause between stimulus and action?

My Current Default Pattern:

Baseline Audit: Deep Reflection

Complete all six prompts before beginning Day 1. These are not warm-up questions. They are assessment-oriented data. Your answers will inform everything that follows.

1 Control vs. Influence: Describe a recent situation where you led with control rather than influence. What was the outcome? What would a soft power response have looked like?

2 Force vs. Flow: Where in your life are you currently pushing hardest? What would trusting the process look like in that situation right now, today?

3 Reaction vs. Response: What is your most reliable trigger? When you are activated, what does your body do first, before your words come out?

4 Cost of Defaults: What is the specific cost of your current hard power defaults? Name the relationships, opportunities, or peace of mind they have compromised.

5 Soft Power Future: What does your life look, feel, and sound like when you are operating from soft power? Write it in the present tense, as if it is already true.

6 Baseline Ratings: On a scale of 1 to 10, rate your current nervous system regulation, boundary clarity, and trust in your own intuition. What do these numbers tell you about where the work lives?

WEEK 1 | DAYS 1 TO 7

Biological Securing

You cannot execute soft power if your body is convinced it is in a state of perpetual threat. Cognitive insight does not override a dysregulated nervous system. Communication strategies do not work when your amygdala has hijacked the prefrontal cortex. Week 1 exists to address this at the physiological level before anything else.

When your sympathetic nervous system is locked in fight, flight, or freeze, your capacity for empathy, measured response, clear intuition, and grounded presence is not diminished. It is physiologically inaccessible. The research on polyvagal theory is unambiguous: the higher-order social engagement system only comes fully online when the body perceives itself as safe. Week 1 is about creating that perception consistently, until it becomes the default.

This week is not about communication or relational dynamics. It is not about boundaries or identity. It is purely about consciously activating your parasympathetic nervous system, your rest-and-digest brake, and shifting your body's default state toward calm. Everything else in this protocol builds on this foundation.

The Return to Zone 1

The goal of Week 1 is to actively disrupt Zone 2, the sympathetic panic state, and Zone 3, the dorsal freeze state, and to physically pull your biology back into Zone 1: ventral vagal safety. In Zone 1, the social engagement system is active. Empathy is available. Discernment is clear. Soft power is possible. These tools are your on-ramps back to Zone 1. Use them with that precision in mind.

The Daily Execution Protocol

Execute and track the following micro-resets 3 to 5 times daily. Do not rely on memory. Rely on measurement. Perception shifts when you have evidence. These are not suggestions; they are the protocol.

- 1. The 3-Part Breath. Place one hand on your belly, one on your chest. Inhale slowly, expanding the belly first, then the ribs, then the chest. Exhale slowly in reverse. Repeat 5 to 10 cycles. This activates diaphragmatic breathing, which directly stimulates the vagus nerve and begins down-regulating the sympathetic response within minutes.
- 2. Conscious Sighing (Rapid Offloading). Inhale deeply through the nose, filling the lungs completely. Exhale audibly through the mouth with a deliberate, extended sigh. Repeat 3 to 5 times. The physiological sigh is the fastest known mechanism for reducing carbon dioxide and rapidly shifting arousal state. The audible exhale is not optional.
- 3. Vagal Toning (The Dimmer Switch). The vagus nerve controls your capacity to return to calm after stress. Hum on a sustained Mmmm for 2 to 5 minutes, or splash cold water on your face to trigger the diving reflex. Both methods directly stimulate vagal tone and activate the parasympathetic brake. Neither requires privacy. Both work immediately.

Added Protocol: The 5-4-3-2-1 Grounding Reset

When acute stress spikes and breathwork feels inaccessible, use sensory grounding to interrupt the threat response. Name 5 things you can see, 4 you can touch, 3 you can hear, 2 you can smell, 1 you can taste. This anchors the prefrontal cortex back online within 60 seconds by recruiting the sensory cortex and breaking the feedback loop of rumination. Use it in any environment, at any moment.

Week 1 Tracker: NS Reset Tracker

Check the box each time you complete the practice. Note your before and after state in the lines provided. The data you collect here is evidence. Treat it that way.

Weekly IntentionNotes and Observations*Week 1 End-of-Week Audit: Close the Loop

Do not skip this audit. The practice creates the shift. The audit locks in the learning. Your data is your evidence of transformation.

1 Did I consistently prioritize my own regulation over external demands this week?

Think about the moments you felt pulled to respond immediately. Did you pause to regulate first? What happened when you did?

2 Was I generally able to move from stress to calm within minutes using these tools?

Which tool worked fastest for you? Which felt hardest to remember in the moment of dysregulation?

3 Did I use a specific protocol tool when feeling overwhelmed?

Name the situation and the tool. What shifted when you used it? What did you notice in your body?

4 What specific situations, people, or thought patterns triggered dysregulation this week?

Look for patterns, not isolated incidents. These are your priority targets for Week 2.

5 How has my baseline energy level shifted from Day 1 to Day 7?

Rate your stress baseline at the start of the week versus the end, on a scale of 1 to 10. What does the change tell you?

WEEK 2 | DAYS 8 TO 14

Relational Auditing

Without clear energetic boundaries, soft power is like a tap left running. Its vital force steadily drains away, leaving you depleted, resentful, and vulnerable to the kind of chronic burnout that mimics biological shutdown. The nervous system regulation you built in Week 1 is only as durable as the relational environment you return it to.

With your biological baseline stabilizing, Week 2 requires you to stop the external bleeding of your energy. This is not a week for reflection on what you wish were different. It is a week for active intervention in real time. You move from constantly responding to the demands and schedules of others to becoming the deliberate steward of your own time, energy, and presence.

This is the operationalization of relational command. Every unset boundary is a withdrawal from your regulation account. Every energy leak you tolerate is a vote against the sovereignty you are installing. This week, you audit, you name, and you act.

Daily Protocol: Audit the Leaks

Every day, identify 3 to 5 specific situations, people, or recurring activities where you consistently feel drained, resentful, or overextended after engagement. For each one, name the underlying fear or obligation that has prevented you from setting a boundary. Unexamined leaks do not self-correct. They compound.

Daily Protocol: Deploy the Soft No

A Soft No is clear, kind, and firm. It does not over-explain, apologize excessively, or leave the door open for negotiation. Practice these scripts in real situations this week. Read them before difficult conversations. Know them before you need them.

SCRIPT 1

"Thank you for thinking of me, but I cannot take on anything new right now."

SCRIPT 2

"My capacity is full at the moment, but I appreciate you asking."

SCRIPT 3

"I have decided to prioritize [X] this week, so I will not be able to [Y]."

Added Protocol: The Request Pause

Before saying yes to any new request this week, implement a mandatory 24-hour pause. Respond with: 'Let me check my capacity and get back to you.' This single habit dismantles the people-pleasing reflex by inserting a cognitive gap between stimulus and response. In that gap, your regulated nervous system can choose, rather than your conditioned compliance.

Added Protocol: The Resentment Audit

Resentment is a boundary that was not set. Identify one person or recurring situation that is generating low-grade resentment. Write the unspoken boundary that needs to be named. This week, say it. Not in anger, not as an ultimatum: as a clear, direct, non-apologetic statement of what you will and will not do.

Clinical Upgrade: The Fawn Recognition

Resentment is not just a relational signal. It is the biological cost of the Fawn response: the survival strategy of trading a boundary for approval. When you feel the low, chronic burn of resentment toward someone or something in your life, you are not dealing with a personality problem. You are dealing with the physiological residue of a self-protective system that learned that compliance was safer.

than clarity. Naming the resentment is the first step toward choosing otherwise.

Reflection and Journaling: Energy Leak Deep Dive

1 Name your top 3 energy leaks right now. For each one: what is it, how long has it been draining you, and what fear has kept you from addressing it directly?

2 Where do you say yes when your whole body says no? Describe the physical sensation in your body the moment you override yourself. What does that override feel like from the inside?

3 Write out the exact words of a Soft No you need to deliver this week. To whom? In what context? Practice writing it as if you are saying it now, in real time.

4 What is the story you tell yourself to justify over-giving? Where did that story originate? What has it cost you to keep repeating it?

5 Describe a moment this week when you successfully held a boundary. What did it cost you emotionally? What did it return to you energetically?

Notes and Observations

Week 2 End-of-Week Audit: Close the Loop

Do not skip this audit. General answers produce no change. Specificity is the mechanism.

1 Where am I currently allowing my energy to be drained?

Name the top three sources with ruthless specificity. Vague answers protect the pattern.

2 What is one specific hard power pattern I need to stop participating in immediately?

Look for: over-explaining, apologizing for needs, saying yes when dysregulated, letting others control the pace or terms of conversation.

3 How did setting or holding even a small boundary shift my ability to show up from soft power?

Connect the boundary to the energy. What became available when you stopped leaking?

4 What fear came up most frequently when I was about to set a boundary this week?

Name the core fear: abandonment, conflict, failure, being seen as difficult, losing love or approval.

5 What would change in my closest relationships if I held these boundaries consistently for 90 days?

Dream into the future with specificity. What becomes possible in your work, your body, your presence?

WEEK 3 | DAYS 15 TO 21

Somatic Decoupling

Your intuition is not a mystical force. It is a precise form of biological intelligence, and a regulated body is a clear conduit for its signal. The body is constantly processing environmental data at a rate that outpaces conscious cognition by a significant margin. The gut-brain axis, the enteric nervous system, and the interoceptive pathways are not metaphors. They are functional systems that generate real data.

With your biological baseline stabilized in Week 1 and your relational perimeter secured in Week 2, Week 3 asks you to trust the internal data center. Chronic stress, overthinking, emotional residue from unprocessed experiences, and the noise of constant input will obscure the signal. Somatic decoupling is the practice of separating your body's genuine intelligence from the distortion of fear, conditioning, and learned helplessness.

You are not learning to feel more. You are learning to discern better: to distinguish the quiet knowing of an integrated nervous system from the loud urgency of an anxious one. That distinction is the foundation of self-governance.

Daily Protocol: The Gut Check

Three times a day, for low-stakes decisions, pause before choosing and notice how your body responds before your analytical mind generates its first rationale. This is data collection, not decision-making therapy. You are building your personal somatic dictionary.

THE SOMATIC YES	THE SOMATIC NO
A sense of lightness, expansion, or ease in the chest or belly. A quiet settling. A forward-leaning sensation. The body moving toward, not away.	A sense of tightness, constriction, or a sinking in the chest or gut. A bracing. A pulling back. The body contracting, not opening.

Weekly Protocol: The Intuitive Decision Matrix

Once this week, for a high-stakes decision you are currently facing, physically map the three competing inputs. The matrix separates what logic is saying, what fear is generating, and what your body is quietly signaling. Write the situation at the top. Complete each column without editing yourself.

The Decision or Situation:

WHAT SAYS	FEAR SAYS	BODY NOW SAYS
What do facts, data, and rational analysis tell you?	What is your trauma response or protective ego signaling?	What is your body quietly communicating right now, beneath the noise?

The Synthesis: My Aligned Decision

After separating logic, fear, and intuition, what does your whole, integrated self choose?

Added Protocol: The Body Scan Before Bed

Each night, conduct a 5-minute body scan. Beginning at the crown of the head, move attention slowly downward through the body. Note where you are holding tension. This is not a relaxation exercise. It is data collection. The body stores unprocessed emotional content in specific locations, and by mapping these consistently across the week, you begin to build a functional somatic vocabulary for your own internal experience.

Added Protocol: The Two-Day Rule for Major Decisions

For any significant decision this week, institute a mandatory two-day waiting period before committing. Day 1 is for logic and analysis: gather the facts, run the numbers, consult trusted advisors. Day 2 is for somatic consultation: sleep on it, and before the analytical mind re-engages in the morning, notice what your body communicates upon waking. That signal is the data that Day 1 cannot generate.

Reflection and Journaling: Listening to Your Body

1 Describe a time in your life when you ignored your gut and regretted it. What was the somatic signal you overrode? What narrative was louder than your body at the time?

2 How does your intuition primarily communicate with you? A physical sensation? A quiet knowing? A recurring image? A sudden certainty that arrives without explanation? Describe it in precise sensory detail.

3 Name a decision you are currently sitting with. Without analysis, just your body's immediate response: does it feel like expansion or constriction? What does that tell you?

4 What is the difference between fear and intuition in your body? How do you distinguish the two? Where in your physical form does each one live?

5 When did you listen to your body this week and what happened? When did you override it, and what was the cost?

Notes and Observations

Week 3 End-of-Week Audit: Close the Loop

You are building your personal somatic dictionary. Each answer makes the signal clearer.

1 When faced with a decision this week, setting logic aside, what did my deepest knowing signal?

Name the specific decision and the somatic signal. What did expansion or constriction tell you, and did you follow it?

2 How does my intuition primarily communicate with me: feeling, image, or quiet knowing?

You are mapping your internal language. Specificity here builds self-trust over time.

3 How often did I listen to my body's signal this week, and what happened when I did not?

Look for the pattern: when you override the signal, what is usually driving the override?

4 What emotional residue from this week do I still need to process?

Where in your body are you holding it? What would it need in order to be released?

5 Is there a decision I have been avoiding that my body has already answered?

Name it. What is the answer your body already knows, and what has been preventing you from honoring it?

WEEK 4 | DAYS 22 TO 30

Ecosystem Governance: The Identity Shift

This is where deliberately cultivated practice becomes effortless posture. You are not installing new habits this week. You are cementing a permanent leadership identity. The distinction matters because habits can be broken during high-stress periods, but an identity is the lens through which behavior is generated automatically.

You have successfully stabilized your biological baseline in Week 1, secured your relational perimeter in Week 2, and brought your somatic intelligence online in Week 3. Week 4 transitions these isolated daily practices into a permanent, undeniable way of operating. This is the difference between someone who does regulation and someone who is regulated. Between someone who sets boundaries occasionally and someone who holds them as a natural expression of self-respect.

Ecosystem governance means taking full ownership of the environment you inhabit, the relationships you sustain, the commitments you keep, and the identity you embody every time you walk into a room. This is your final enforcement week.

Daily Protocol: Schedule the Balance

Every day, actively map your Energy Withdrawals, the activities, meetings, obligations, and interactions that inherently cost you, and ruthlessly counteract them with non-negotiable Energy Deposits. The Energy Balance Map is on the following page. An unmanaged energy account depletes without warning. Mapping it creates the leverage to intervene before depletion.

ENERGY WITHDRAWALS	ENERGY DEPOSITS
MON _____ _____	MON _____ _____
TUE _____ _____	TUE _____ _____
WED _____ _____	WED _____ _____
THU _____ _____	THU _____ _____
FRI _____ _____	FRI _____ _____
SAT _____ _____	SAT _____ _____
SUN _____ _____	SUN _____ _____

Balance Reflection: Where are the gaps? What one deposit can you add that you have been neglecting?

The Identity Anchor Statement

Write a single declarative sentence that captures who you are now, not who you are working to become. This is your Identity Anchor. Read it aloud each morning before your first interaction of the day. You do not read it to remind yourself; you read it to declare it.

Clinical Upgrade: The Identity Alignment

This statement must be drawn directly from the Sustaining Roles you mapped in IOS-1 and the governed identity you have been installing across the full Tier 1 protocol. It is the operationalization of your governed identity: the translation of structural psychological work into a daily behavioral cue. If the statement does not feel precisely true, it is not yet specific enough. Revise until it lands with recognition, not aspiration.

Example: I am a regulated, boundaried woman who leads from grounded presence and trusts her own knowing.

My Identity Anchor Statement:

Added Protocol: The 90-Day Integration Plan

Sovereignty is not a 30-day project. It is a lifelong practice. On Day 30, identify your three non-negotiable minimum viable practices: the three tools from this protocol that, if dropped, would allow your baseline to erode. Name them. Schedule them. Then identify the one domain of your life, one relationship, one role, or one arena, where you will deepen your practice in the next 90 days. Specificity is the only plan that holds.

The Soft Power Daily Checklist

Track each behavior you practiced today across all 7 days of Week 4. You are assessing every interaction through the lens of connection and self-governance, not control. This checklist is not a report card. It is a measurement instrument.

Weekly Intention

Notes and Observations

Week 4 End-of-Week Audit: Close the Loop

1 What is the single biggest transformation I have experienced over these four weeks?

Speak to the biological, relational, and somatic dimensions. What is concretely different in your body, your relationships, your decisions?

2 What are my three non-negotiable daily or weekly practices for maintaining my nervous system baseline?

These are your minimum viable practices. Non-negotiable means non-negotiable. Write them as commitments.

3 What is one area of my life or leadership where I will continue to deepen this work?

Name the specific relationship, role, arena, or pattern you are committing to next. Get precise.

4 Where did I still catch myself defaulting to hard power this week?

No judgment: only data. This is where the next phase of work lives.

5 Who have I become that I was not 30 days ago?

Write this in the present tense. This is your new baseline. Introduce yourself to yourself.

SECTION VI

The Final Bridge to Self-Mastery

You did the work. Now own the shift.

W1 Biological Sensing Your nervous system is regulated.	W2 Relational Auditing Your boundaries are firm.
W3 Somatic Decoupling Your intuition is online.	W4 Ecosystem Governance Your leadership posture is permanent.

Day 30: Your 30-Day Final Audit

Five questions. Complete answers. No abbreviation. This is the evidence you will return to when the practice becomes difficult.

1 What is the single biggest transformation you have experienced in reclaiming your sovereignty? Think biologically, relationally, and somatically. What feels concretely different in your body?

2 What are your three non-negotiable daily or weekly practices for maintaining your nervous system reset? Write them as commitments, not suggestions.

3 Where in your life or leadership will you continue deepening this work? Name the specific relationship, role, or arena. Precision is the point.

4 What was the hardest moment of these 30 days, and what did it teach you? The resistance is where the information lives. Honor what came up.

5 Who have you become that you were not before? Describe yourself in the present tense, as if introducing this version of yourself to someone new.

Therapeutic Addendum

For Licensed Practitioners and Supervised Clinical Use

This addendum is provided for licensed mental health professionals, certified coaches operating within a supervised framework, and practitioners integrating the 30-Day Sovereignty Reset into a structured therapeutic or coaching context. It is not intended for general distribution to participants.

Clinical Context and Theoretical Grounding

The 30-Day Sovereignty Reset is grounded in three intersecting bodies of evidence-based practice: Polyvagal Theory (Porges), somatic processing approaches including Somatic Experiencing (Levine), and behavioral activation frameworks adapted from third-wave Cognitive Behavioral Therapy.

The four-week progression is deliberately sequenced to address nervous system regulation before relational intervention, and somatic intelligence before identity consolidation. This sequence reflects the clinical understanding that top-down cognitive interventions are limited in efficacy when the body remains in a chronic state of sympathetic arousal or dorsal shutdown. Practitioners should assess participants for capacity at each phase transition before encouraging progression.

Week-by-Week Clinical Considerations

Week 1: Biological Securing

Breathing-based and vagal toning protocols are generally well-tolerated and appropriate for most adults. However, practitioners should screen for individuals with a history of respiratory conditions, trauma responses to breathwork, or dissociative presentations for whom sustained breath-focused practice may be contraindicated. For these individuals, sensory grounding (5-4-3-2-1) is the recommended primary protocol, with breathwork introduced gradually and under direct support.

Week 2: Relational Auditing

The boundary-setting work in Week 2 may surface significant material for individuals with complex relational trauma, attachment disruption, or enmeshed family systems. Practitioners should anticipate activation around the Resentment Audit in particular. The clinical note regarding Fawn response biology is included to normalize the physiological dimension of compliance-based relational patterns, reducing shame and increasing the client's capacity to act with agency.

Week 3: Somatic Decoupling

The distinction between fear and intuition explored in Week 3 is clinically significant and may require extended processing for individuals whose threat response has been chronically activated. Practitioners should create space for clients to report on the Gut Check practice in session, supporting accurate discernment without pathologizing confusion between the two signals. The Two-Day Rule for major decisions is a practical harm-reduction intervention for individuals prone to impulsive decision-making under stress.

Week 4: Ecosystem Governance

The Identity Anchor Statement requires that the client can access a stable, embodied sense of self to draw from. For individuals in early recovery, significant life transition, or with identity diffusion presentations, the practitioner may need to co-construct this statement across multiple sessions rather than expecting single-session completion. Connect this exercise explicitly to prior identity mapping work completed in the Tier 1 architecture to ensure continuity.

Intake Assessment Prompts

Prior to commencing the protocol, practitioners may wish to gather the following baseline data:

- Current perceived stress level (1 to 10) and primary stressors
- Nervous system regulation history: prior somatic work, trauma therapy, or body-based practices
- Relational context: primary relationship structures and known boundary challenges
- History with breathwork or body scan practices, including any known contraindications
- Current therapeutic support, medications, or other active treatment protocols

Contraindication Considerations

The protocol is not designed to replace clinical treatment and should not be positioned as such. Practitioners should exercise particular care when working with individuals who:

- Are currently experiencing acute psychiatric symptoms or recent crisis episodes
- Have a history of dissociation that is triggered by somatic awareness practices
- Are in active substance use or early-stage recovery from addiction
- Present with Borderline Personality Organization where boundary work may destabilize the therapeutic alliance before sufficient relational safety is established

Integration with Broader Tier 1 Architecture

The 30-Day Sovereignty Reset is the behavioral enforcement mechanism of the Distinct Character Tier 1 product sequence. It is designed to follow, not precede, completion of the Somatic Baseline Protocol (Phase 1), IOS-1: Identity Operating System (Phase 2), MES-1: The Masking Economy System (Phase 3), and NCS-1: Narrative Control System (Phase 4). Practitioners introducing this protocol in isolation should provide psychoeducation on the conceptual architecture to ensure clients have adequate foundational framing for the material.

Practitioner Self-Care Note

Facilitating identity and nervous system work at depth requires a regulated practitioner. If you are using this protocol with clients across multiple concurrent sessions, ensure you have adequate supervision, peer consultation, and your own somatic maintenance practices in place. The protocol's emphasis on energy management applies as directly to the practitioner as to the participant.
